Passionate about Field Sports

Our shooting and deer stalking estate extends across more than 3,500 hectares in the Stubai and Gschnitztal Valleys. Our local, highly experienced guides accompany our sporting guests at all times, so you are guaranteed a shot as well as plenty of expert advice and practical help. Armin Pfurtscheller and senior proprietor Leo Pfurtscheller will also be delighted to advise – there's nothing they don't know about game shooting in Tyrol.

We look forward to your visit!

Things to know about shooting and deer stalking

The Tyrolean mountains have been famous for their abundant game since time immemorial. The nobility has always been passionate about the hunt, and rather considered it their exclusive privilege.

In 1414 Duke Frederick IV of Tyrol issued a code of hunting, which enshrined princely hunting rights and banned peasants from practising the sport. Predators and, in some areas, chamois were the only exception to this draconian rule.

The Tyrolean peasantry reluctantly complied with this ban, but made repeated demands for hunting and fishing to be available to all. Since their demands were ignored, the peasants' natural sense of justice impelled them to simply take what was denied them by law. Stories about poachers abound; they tell of revenge, feuds, hate and jealousy. The most famous book about Tyrolean hunting was penned by none other than 'The Great Huntsman', Emperor Maximilian I (1493-1519). This 'Gejaidbuch der Grafascht Tirol' details all the deer and chamois territories in Tyrol and is therefore of equal interest to today's shooting and stalking enthusiasts.

Shooting seasons in Tyrol

Our shooting estate extends across 3,500 hectares. Up to an altitude of 2200m it is easily accessible by motorised vehicle, which makes it ideal for guests with mobility issues. Join us on a high mountain stalking and shooting experience in an unspoiled natural landscape with majestic views of the Tyrolean mountains – unforgettable! Our whole family are passionate about the sport, and will be on hand with help and advice.
